15. The Product software sends a request from a first (requesting) positional information device (e.g., mobile device or desktop with software installed) to a server. The request is for the real-time location (e.g., stored address) of an asset, and includes a first identifier of the requesting positional information device (e.g., user ID and password for the Product software used in the particular enterprise). The request is sent to the Product server for transmitting the asset location. The server receives the at least one address from a second (sending) positional information device at the asset (e.g., employee mobile phone). Certain aspects of this element are illustrated in the screenshot(s) below and/or in those provided in connection with other allegations herein.

Exactly How Does GPS Tracking Work?

Tracking devices and smartphones have a GPS receiver. It obtains signals from a number of stationary satellites positioned in earth's orbit, and the combination of these signals will allow the device to determine its location in terms of latitude and longitude coordinates. The device sends these coordinates, along with the unique device identifier, to the Btracking server through a wireless network, and this information is used to plot the device's location on the Btracking Mapping Platform.

16. The at least one address is received from the server at the requesting positional information device. For example, the Product's server transmits the position of an asset (at least one address) to the requesting positional information device. Certain aspects of this element are illustrated in the screenshot(s) below and/or in those provided in connection with other allegations herein.

17. A second identifier for the second (sending) positional information device is determined based on the first identifier and the server retrieves the at least one address stored in the at least one sending positional information device. The Product application installed on the requesting positional information device requests (from the server) the asset's GPS location (i.e., at least one stored address stored). As shown above, before activating the tracker (i.e., the sending positional information device), a unique tracking device's ID number or credentials (i.e., second identifier) needs to be added to the user's account identified by the user login ID and password (i.e., the first identifier). Hence, the tracker device's ID number or asset credentials (i.e., second identifier) is mapped to the user's login ID (i.e., the first identifier) for tracking the real-time location (i.e., at least one stored address stored) of the asset. Certain aspects of this element are illustrated in the screenshot(s) below and/or in those provided in connection with other allegations herein.
